GREETINGS FROM THE PASTOR...

From Pastor Jami Possinger

Whenever Mitch and I are on vacation over a weekend, we look for a congregation to visit so that we can attend worship. I must admit that we usually look for a Lutheran congregation first, but we are willing to go to any denomination if the congregation looks dynamic. I like to do this because it is my opportunity to be a participant in worship and not a leader of worship. And it gives me the chance to hear different ministers preach.

I got my fill of hearing preachers recently. I spent the week of May 11th – May 15th at a continuing education event called the Festival of Homiletics. It was a five day conference on preaching. Throughout the five days we sat in worship services where some of the greatest mainline preachers – many of whom work in theological education institutions – shared the word of God with us through preaching and lectures.

Walter Bruggemann, Professor Emeritus of Columbia Theological Seminary preached about why the Bible is so important and so problematic. Nadia Bolz-Weber, the founding pastor of the Lutheran congregation in Denver called House for All Sinners and Saints, spoke in a lecture about being able to preach the good news of Jesus means you have to know what the bad news of the world is to be relevant. (Google Nadia’s church to see someone you would least expect to be a Lutheran pastor!). Donald Davis, United Methodist pastor and now professional storyteller, shared gospel-centered stories in a performance that had the audience give him a standing ovation. Dr. David Lose, President of the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Philadelphia, preached that forgiveness is not righting a wrong or correcting the past; it is creating an open future orienting us to that future. Brian McLaren, author, speaker and activist shared his views of the changing church in a changing world and the hope and renewal that will bring. Rev. Dr. Luke Powery, using the imagery of John the Baptist, proclaimed that God provides a word in the wilderness time and time again. And Rev. Dr. Otis Moss III’s lecture was titled, “Preaching the Blues in a Post-Modern World” – helping us to see how great gospel preachers approach preaching and receiving many “Amens” from the audience listening! There were so many more that were memorable and will continue to feed me for quite a while.

Perhaps the most important “stuff” I brought back came from a theme that ran throughout the conference. Just before we arrived in Denver, many major newspapers printed articles depicting the decline of mainline religion. The Christian share of the U.S. population is declining, while the number of U.S. adults who do not identify with any organized religion is growing. The percentage of adults (ages 18 and older) who describe themselves as Christians has dropped by nearly eight percentage points in just seven years, from 78.4% in an equally massive Pew Research survey in 2007 to 70.6% in 2014. Over the same period, the percentage of Americans who are religiously unaffiliated – describing themselves as atheist, agnostic or “nothing in particular” – has jumped more than six points, from 16.1% to 22.8%. The numbers are depressing and have an effect not only on membership but also on finances. Mainline denominations are afraid. Declining congregations are afraid. People live in fear that one day they may wake up and something they love will no longer be there. Fear. Panic. Do something! And many of the pastors at the conference were asking, “What’s a Pastor to do?”

Some say that every 500 years, there is a reformation of the church. The last one was the Protestant Reformation – sparked by Martin Luther and others – in 1517. We are, again, at that 500 year mark. And for some that brings a sense of foreboding. But... what if – instead of worrying about the decline in mainline religion – we focused on what the mission of our faith calls us to be doing in the world. Maybe then we would recognize that there are innumerable kinds of great, creative, meaningful, kingdom-of-God sorts of work out there needing to be done... there are people outside our walls, outside our normal sphere of thinking, who need what we have to share – and in concentrating on our own survival we may ignore them... there are relationships that we are failing to cultivate – opportunities to offer our church as a gift to our community that are being missed!

The conference was called “festival” of preaching – it surely was that. And it was also a time for Methodist, Episcopalian, United Church of Christ, Moravian, Lutheran, Presbyterian brothers and sisters to come together to share the Word of God and respond with loud “Amen’s” to the challenge God is calling us all into... together!

Blessings,
Pastor Jami

STEWARDSHIP CORNER

Give First

By Chick Lane

I recently had two very interesting conversations on the same day. The first was with a pastor who asked, "Why has stewardship work gotten so much more difficult in recent years?" The second was with a different pastor who reported a conversation with a parishioner this way, "I was talking with a woman in the congregation recently, and she brought up her giving. She reported that their family was giving $20 each week to the church and she felt this was about all they could afford to give. Their household income is well in excess of $100,000, so they are giving less than one percent of their income, and they feel they are maxed out."

Obviously, these two conversations are connected. One reason stewardship work has gotten so much more difficult is that our culture of consumerism has enticed many people to make long term financial commitments that render generous giving almost impossible. For someone to report that giving less than one percent of their income has them maxed out, is, of course, absurd. What people should acknowledge is the choices they have made about the house(s) they will live in, the cars they will drive, the clothes they will wear, the lifestyle they will live. After all these choices have been made first, then there is nothing left to give to God's work in the world.

William T. Cavanaugh writes powerfully of this in "Being Consumed: Economics and Christian Desire". In two particularly powerful sentences, he writes, "Rather than turning away from material things and toward God, in consumer culture we plunge ever more deeply into the world of things ... One can always send a check to help feed the hungry, but one's charitable preferences will always be in competition with one's own endless desires."

When we think of Stewardship, do we think about the importance of giving to God first, and living on the rest? In the face of our culture of consumerism, if people give what they have left after they have taken care of all their needs and wants, generous giving will simply never happen. The Bible speaks clearly of the importance of giving to God first. When Moses is on Mount Sinai (for the second trip), God says, "The best of the first fruits of your ground you shall bring to the house of the Lord your God." (Exodus 35:26) Just before the people enter the promised land, God says to the people, "When you have come into the land that the Lord your God is giving you as an inheritance to possess, and you possess it, and settle in it, you shall take some of the first of all the fruit of the ground ... and you shall put it in a basket and go to the place that the Lord your God will choose as a dwelling for his name." (Deuteronomy 26:1-2)
